The Stranger

AN OPTIONAL RULE · THREE OR MORE PLAYERS

The Horror wears a familiar face. Agree before the game whether you play with it. Cut out one slip for each player: one Stranger, the rest yourself. Fold them, and keep them by the Horror track. The first time the Horror reaches 14 in an adventure, every player draws one and reads it in secret.

You are the Stranger Roll a d6 in secret for your want. Play your hero as usual. Tell no one.	You are yourself Someone at this table is not. Watch them.
You are yourself Someone at this table is not. Watch them.	You are yourself Someone at this table is not. Watch them.
You are yourself Someone at this table is not. Watch them.	You are yourself Someone at this table is not. Watch them.

The Stranger's want (d6)

Before the adventure ends, you want this to come true:

1. The Horror reaches 21.
2. You keep one relic or grimoire the party finds, and tell no one.
3. Another hero is left alone, out of sight of the rest, for a whole scene.
4. A foe the party could have finished off gets away.
5. The party takes the longer or darker way, once, because you said so.
6. Another hero spends Horror they did not need to.

Naming the Stranger

Once an adventure, the living players may name a hero together, out loud.

Right: the Stranger is themselves again, and the Horror falls by one d6.

Wrong: the Horror rises by 2.

Never named, and the want came true: the Stranger earns one extra mark at the end, and tells the table what they did.

The Stranger's hero is still a hero: they roll, fight and pay Horror like everyone else. A Stranger who dies takes the secret with them; reveal it at the end.

Free to print for your own table